SERVICE INTERVALS

Some manufacturers recommend service intervals from 10,000kms even up to 20,000kms, but this is often reduced under certain conditions.

We generally recommend more frequent servicing, depending on factors such as vehicle age, and driving conditions. Apart from the benefits of changing the oil, regular servicing allows us to identify safety concerns and replace any worn items before they cause major damage

Regular servicing—using a top quality lubricant, reduces the effects of the problems listed and greatly increases the life of your engine. It will also improve fuel economy, increase performance and provide your vehicle in a safe and reliable condition.

REASONS FOR CHANGING ENGINE OIL

1. By-products of combustion, particularly when the engine is cold cause sludge build up in the oil, which can block oil galleries and starve moving parts of lubrication.
2. Dilution from fuel will make the oil thinner and reduce its lubricating properties.
3. Metal deposits from moving components, builds up in the oil and accelerates wear.

TIMING BELTS

What is a cambelt?

Sometimes called a camshaft drive belt or timing belt: it is a reinforced toothed rubber belt used in about 70% of today's motor cars. It is propelled by the engine crankshaft and drives the camshaft which in turn operates the engine valves.

Where is it found?

It is at the front of the engine, usually under plastic covers to protect it from damage. It is behind the other more obvious drive belts such as the fan or alternator belts. As it cannot be seen without removing the covers and other components it is often neglected.

Why does it wear?

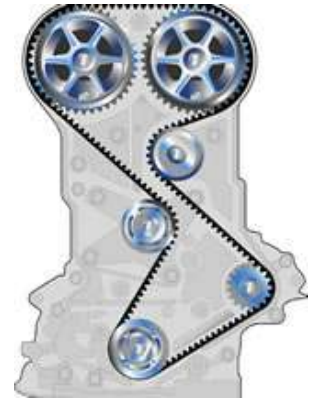

The cambelt carries a very high load in the engine and as with any rubber component of the vehicle, it perishes with age and wears with use.

What will happen if it is not replaced on time?

If the belt is not replaced on time it may break or the drive teeth may strip. If this happens the camshaft in the engine stops rotating, leaving some valves protruding in the cylinders. The crankshaft continues to rotate and can push the pistons into the valves and bend them. This causes major engine damage which is very costly and time consuming to repair.

When should it be replaced?

Most car manufacturers recommend replacement from 60,000km to 100,000km. We strongly recommend replacement at manufacturers recommended interval. To replace the belt is only a fraction of the cost of repairing the damaged caused should it break, not to mention the inconvenience of having your car out of use for many days.
